Madeline has been very active in her club, district and WSFGC. She also belongs to many Plant Societies, not just by name but participating and contributing to all of them. Madeline travels great distances to learn about all aspect of gardening and garden club related organizations. One of her greatest contributions is bringing that knowledge back to her local clubs and sharing the knowledge she has learned. She specializes in doing “Educational Exhibits” for flower shows and grows many mum cuttings for her club and district plants sales.

Winter Walk, Winter Wonderland

By Karla Stover

The roast is in the oven, the potatoes are peeled, and the dog and I are hiking in the woods. Winter-woods walking is different from summer hiking. For one thing, it's easier to see the dead leaves, twigs, plant stalks, and animal droppings which nature is gradually turning into rich, forest compost. Unexpectedly I spot a lone oak leaf carried by the wind clear from the other end of the county where they're native. However, mostly our trail is covered with maple leaves, many still retaining their color. As a child, I ironed maple leaves with wax paper to help them retain their beauty. Four years ago, University of Washington scientists got a grant to check the possibility of tapping big leaf maples here for syrup. Two good reasons to love them. Watch out Vermont. After drying up in summer heat, moss has returned, thanks to recent rain. Moss has been used for everything from surgical dressings by World War 1 doctors, to diapers by Native Americans. It's a lovely contrast to gray-green bits of fallen lichen. I'm worried, though, because where I walk, moss is losing a competition to a ground cover I've been unable to identify.

The dog chases a squirrel into a cluster of Oregon grape. Both the Indians and the pioneers used it for medicine, food, and dye. But where we're walking, there's more salal than Oregon grape. Salal has sticky berries which, when very young, I used to put on my earlobes. The Indians were more practical, turning the berries into cakes, or drying them to treat indigestion, colic and diarrhea, and respiratory diseases such as colds or tuberculosis. I've had salal berry pie; it's very dense. Not to ignore the Oregon grape, though. It also had its uses, mainly to fight parasites and viruses.

The woods have lots of green, my favorite color. Sword ferns snuggle against Douglas firs which the Salish Indians used to ward off ghosts. When we bought our house, there was a crop of all these natives but it lacked two types of trees: cedars, which I brought in, and madrona which are notoriously difficult to propagate. My family had a number of elderly Indian friends who told me their women used madrona's orange berries to make necklaces and various decorations.

I recently learned that once dried, the berries have hooked barbs which latch onto animals for migration. How cool is that? Along our forest trail, the madrona's peely-ochre trunks stand out among the green.

Eventually, my dog and I break out of the trees and into a clearing where we pass a spread of the ground cover, kinnikinnick. Before tobacco became the go-to plant for Old World smokers, they sought out the nearest patch of kinnikinnick, a word that actually means "smoking mixture. Some articles I've read claim it's becoming endangered. And my hike is endangered, too. Sadly, the sight of it means our walk in the woods is over. So, back to the kitchen I go.

Hybridizer Award

Madeline West, Chairman

Chad Harris

Chad Harris lives in Washougal and first became enthralled with Iris when his grandmother took him to visit public gardens with Japanese Iris. Years later he began searching for this plant to use in landscaping a home garden, showing blooms between the spring Rhododendrons and the summer roses.

Chad has been a member of the American Iris Society for over 40 years. He is a member of the, King Co., Pierce Co. Oregon Trail, and Greater Portland Iris Societies, currently serving SW Washington and NW Oregon. He is an American Iris Society master judge.

Chad has won many awards for his hybridized introductions, including the Payne Medal for his Japanese Iris, 'Bewitching Twilight' in addition to the American Iris Society's award for Achievement in Hybridizing. To date he has introduced 45 new Iris cultivars.

Theme: I Spy with My Little Eye, Something Green Outside

MY GREEN WORLD

By, Bridgette Schumaier

I spy with my little eye, my green World.

Green trees, green grass, and green Moss.

I see green recycle bins, and green land.

I also see green food for us and other things around us.

I see the green rolling hills.

Lastly, I see a praying mantis. I spy with my little eye, my green world.

WESTERN WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY, HUXLEY COLLEGE OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mate Pasztor

Mate is majoring in Environmental Studies, with an emphasis on Community Resilience and Social Justice, this aligns with his passion for making a positive impact. He is eager to contribute to local communities where ever he goes as well to the global community we all share.

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON

College of Built Environments, Dept, of Landscape Architecture

Verna J Weller Scholarship

Griffin Cronk

Griffin is a graduate student in Landscape Architecture studying ecological design for urban public spaces. His interest in working for the public realm stems from his desire to help cities envision just and sustainable futures. Inspired by his background in agriculture, he looks forward to a career working with plants as a Landscape Architect.

College of Arts and Sciences, Dept. of Biology

May Garrett Hayes Scholarship

Gavin Gascho

Gavin is an undergraduate junior studying Ecology, Evolution & Conservation Biology. He hopes to one day pursue a career in plant biology and ecological research. He is currently working as an undergraduate research assistant in the Imaizumi lab, where he manages the care for plants and measures the growth in order to discern the physiological changes that occur when genes are mutated

School of Environment and Forest Service

Hanna Palmer

Hanna is an undergraduate studying environmental science and Chinese. She has a passion for connecting people with the natural world, She has participated in fieldwork both in the US and abroad to further understand how to engage communities with responsible land stewardship. After graduation she aspires to assist nonprofit organizations in providing people with accessible information about the environment and ways to engage with nature.

WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY

Department of Horticulture
